

RLUIPA Litigation History – Land Use Decisions (2000-2015)

Methodological Acknowledgement

There is no single and correct way to tabulate a compilation of RLUIPA's case law in the land use context. Many land use disputes are settled before litigation ever becomes necessary, and many more are settled at varying stages of litigation. This compilation excludes settlements (with exception, see below) because many are untraceable and partial inclusion would distort the success rate of religious organizations. Instead, this compilation focuses centrally on the success rates of religious organization plaintiffs in their claims on the merits. The success rates below are therefore not completely indicative of a religious organization's actual likelihood of achieving success in pursuing legal remedy; relief can be and often is obtained through mediation that may not involve the final decision of a court on the merits of a claim. A typical religious organization therefore has a likelihood of obtaining relief above and beyond the success rates below. The success rates and chronological listing of cases nonetheless provide illustration of court assessments of RLUIPA in practice over the statute's first fifteen years of existence, subject to the following methodological stipulations:

A favorable ruling refers to a ruling on the merits in favor of a religious organization, a jury verdict in favor of a religious organization followed by settlement, remand on the merits in favor of a religious organization followed by settlement, or the granting of an injunction or temporary restraining order in favor of a religious organization.

Disputes settled before a jury verdict, grant of injunction or temporary restraining order, or ruling on the merits have been excluded.

A pleading is justiciable if a plaintiff has standing and its claim is ripe and not moot. Justiciability is emphasized in this compilation and treated as distinct from jurisdictional considerations because of the prevalence of standing concerns in land use litigation.

A claim was pled but later precluded by the court because another claim was successful is considered a claim not pled.
